

June 2020

During the past weeks we have seen our communities come together as one voice with messages of change, equity, and social justice. As a country we must look towards the messages of some of our most inspirational leaders such as Martin Luther King Jr., John F. Kennedy, Rosa Parks, Susan B. Anthony, and Cesar Chavez who created peaceful yet powerful movements which gave our nation the drive to move forward for a stronger more united country for future generations to come.

The recent peaceful movements that have been witnessed by millions around the world show a sign of solidarity that has inspired not only one generation but our younger generation of students. Many students throughout the country have held silent protests, beautifully inspired vigils, and a message for change not just for the moment but for an everlasting positive impact for future generations to come.

ACS WASC has been moved by the peaceful protests around the world and it takes pride in seeing students become the change agents of the world. As we visit schools we have seen more and more students creating projects that relate to social justice, assisting communities that have a high poverty rate and the homeless.

Schools are asking students to seek new ways to help others not just as an assignment to complete but projects that will assist people and communities near and far. WASC teams have seen students post some of their projects on social media in order for other students to help their own communities. Students are building bridges of hope and change.

ACS WASC takes pride working with schools around the world in order to continue to move schools forward in not only academics, but ensuring that they provide a school environment that has access, equity, and diversity for all.

We continue to be proud of all of our schools and continue to be inspired by a generation of students that are looking to benefit all those in need and not just themselves.

Accrediting Commission for Schools
Western Association of Schools and Colleges